Abstract: To be a flexible teacher, we should possess a variety of personality traits that enable us to adapt to different situations and students' needs. Here are some key traits. This article illustrates some types of personalities that is need to be a teaching while to teach students for some skills.

Key words: Active listening (Good Listener), Adaptability, Collaboration, Creativity, Empathy, Engagement, Focus on growth, Lifelong Learning, Patience, Preparedness, Respect, Sense of Humor.

Not everyone is born with natural teaching skills, but everyone can become an Effective Teacher without the development. Whether they're teaching advanced calculus or how to count to 10, effective teachers share certain universal traits in common. For example, all great educators have the ability to listen actively- not only to their student, but also to their colleagues, school administrator and students' family members.

We'll talk more about active listening, and why it matters below, a long with several other traits that educators should try to exemplify. While some are less tangible than others and potentially, more challenging to cultivate- all of them are equally worthwhile for teachers to actively develop and practice. Read on as we break down more than a dozen of the most important traits for educators, including: Active Listening, Adaptability, Collaboration, Creativity, Empathy, Engagement, Focus on growth, Lifelong learning, Patience, Preparedness, Respect and Sense of Humor.

Even heard of the Turkish proverb "If speaking is silver, the listening is good?". A good teacher is not only good at speaking and presenting, but also excels in listening – representing an approachable and empathetic figure, that student can speak to or confide in with any concerns they may have what's more, active listening skills are vital in ensuring students understand lesson material and controlling an class conflicts.

You don't need to have a specific personality type to be an Inspiring and Effective teacher. However, there are some useful traits you should work on developing or strengthening if your goals is to be a more engaging and successful educator:

Adaptability

Adaptability is a must for teachers who need to continuously evaluate what's working for their students and even more importantly, what isn't working. Being adaptable and flexible allows you flow between different theories- something we'll discuss momentarily-without becoming immobilized stress or indecision.

Empathy

Empathy is the ability to understand what another person is feeling or experiencing- put simply, putting yourself in another person's shoes. As a teacher, it's vital to practice empathy instead of making assumptions-for instance, making efforts to understand and address the root issue that's causing a student to fall behind their peers, perform more poorly than they used to, or lash out in class.

Patience

Patience is important both to possess and to model for your students- who, as we discussed in our post on theories of learning, may view you as a role model and emulate your behavior. Having a reserve of patience will make it easier for you to work through each student's unique struggles and challenges, which may be difficult or slow-going to overcome.

Engagement

Students are perceptive from an extremely young age and can easily tell when teachers are bored by or apathetic toward their own material. If you want to generate engagement and enthusiasm in your class, it's imperative to exemplify those traits yourself, showing your students an infectious passion for learning- and all the exciting discoveries and hobbies that it can unlock for them!

Active Listening

Active listening is vital if you want to effectively diagnose and help overcome students' unique obstacles and challenges. Seek feedback encourage honesty, provide ways for students to contact you easily, and be attentive whenever you listen, always trying to read between the lines and access body language while you're communicating. Learn more about how and why you should improve your active listening skills.

In conclusion, you should know do you need personalities about teaching? Which kind of abilities do you need? There're some variety of tips about teaching and you should make it yourself. As I abovementioned that, some abilities, and tips which helps to you are available.
